

Pier-2 Art Center Artist-in-Residence Program

I. About Pier-2 in Kaohsiung

Kaohsiung, located in the southern corner of Taiwan, is the second largest city of the country and was once an industrial metropolis. With a seaport that serves as the gateway to international trade, Kaohsiung is characterized by diverse development, passion, and liveliness.

Pier-2 refers to Pier No. 2 in Basin No. 3 of the Port of Kaohsiung. It was built in 1973 as a general harbor warehouse complex. In 2000, this experimental site was rediscovered when Kaohsiung City Government was looking for a suitable location for the National Day fireworks display. In recent years, exhibitions and performance events such as The Delight of Chinese Character Festival, Kaohsiung Design Festival, Kaohsiung International Steel & Iron Sculpture Festival, Kaohsiung International Container Arts Festival, Megaport Festival, Rainbow Bay Festival, and Experimental Theatre Festival have become the most prominent events staged in Pier-2, adding rich spiritual connotations to this venue.

In addition to serving as a distinctive art and cultural space in Kaohsiung, Pier-2 is a recreation area for the public, drawing huge crowds with its open and multi-purpose space.

Pier-2 Art Center is oriented towards an international art platform in Taiwan with its development directed at avant-garde, experiment, and originality. Consisting of merely two warehouses at the beginning of the development, it has now grown into an area with a total of 25 structures that are grouped into Dayong Warehouse, Penglai Warehouse, and Dayi Warehouse. Besides a variety of art exhibitions and performances, places for experimental theater and small-scale popular music performances have been designated among the warehouses. Operators in the cultural and creative arts sector are proactively invited to move into the remaining space for further development.

II. About the Venue

Dayi Warehouse was initially used by the Taiwan Sugar Corporation for storing sugar and fish meal. As industrial transfer took place, the facilities were leased out to ship breakers as their workplace. In 2012, with the effort of the City Government, Dayi Warehouse was finally included in the area of the Pier-2 Art Center. The nearly six-meter high old buildings are the characteristics of Dayi Warehouse, which will primarily be used as a venue for guiding operators in the cultural and creative sector in creating artwork, conducting research and development, and providing services in the center. Operators may also engage in inter-industry or cross-disciplinary collaboration with other resident artists in the cultural and creative sector to create a clustering effect. The Pier-2 Art Center's Artist-in-Residence Program plans to designate part of Dayi Warehouse as a residency for artists and artist teams. A 33-square-meter creation space (including a bathroom) and a 17-square-meter attic that will serve as a living space will be available here for resident artists to create artwork, so as to revive Pier-2 and establish a platform for art and cultural exchanges and performances.

At present, the Pier-2 Art Center provides nine artist studios (living space included) and a lounge (a complex area that can be used for exchanges, cooking, dining, administration, lectures, meetings and so on), offering resident artists (and artist teams) a platform full of art and cultural resources for exhibitions, performances, and exchanges.
